

DESCRIPTION

Clinical supervision is the main tool for teaching new practitioners how to do psychotherapy. This workshop will help practitioners become even more comfortable with the “teaching” part of clinical supervision. We will review how to help new therapists understand theory, how to make sense of the dizzying array of theories and psychotherapies, how to use theory to build a case conceptualization and use that conceptualization to develop and carry out interventions. The workshop will also discuss the importance of the supervisory relationship and how it can be leveraged to better help supervisors understand the therapy process. Lastly, we will examine our own skills and levels of confidence in this teaching role. Please note that this participatory training will include working in breakout rooms in small groups and some group discussions and exercises.

OBJECTIVES

INSTRUCTOR: Marilyn Ghezzi, MSW, LCSW

Marilyn is a clinical associate professor at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill School of Social Work. She received her BA and MSW from UNC-Chapel Hill. Ghezzi joined the school after 20 years of practice experience in the public mental health system. She draws on this experience to enhance her teaching of MSW students in courses on mental health theory and practice, including group work, brief treatment, dialectical behavior therapy and differential diagnosis. A frequent recipient of teaching awards, she has won both the Dean's Award for Teaching Excellence and the "Most Outstanding Faculty Member" (selected by graduating MSW class) multiple times and received the Distinguished Teaching Award for Post-Baccalaureate Instruction, an honor given to only four professors a year from the entire UNC-CH system.
