DESCRIPTION

This training will provide an overview of perinatal substance use, potential fetal and maternal impacts of substance use during pregnancy, and evidence-based tools for engagement in substance use treatment in the perinatal period.

Participants will leave the session with a better understanding of how to approach and engage perinatal clients that are using substances.

OBJECTIVES

Upon completion of this program, the participant should be able to:

1. Increase knowledge of the nature and prevalence of substance use among pregnant people.
2. Increase understanding of the potential impacts of such use on fetal and maternal health outcomes.
3. Report awareness of evidence-based tools for screening, engagement, and referrals for women with substance use during the perinatal period.

INSTRUCTOR

Andrea Winkler MSW, LCSW, LCAS

Andrea is an engaging and informative practice-based trainer. Her passion for trauma and gender related issues began early in her academic experience at James Madison University, and continued throughout her MSW program at UNC Chapel Hill. Completion of UNC's certificate in Substance Abuse Studies provided additional specialization in a population for whom trauma is a primary co-occurring feature. Andrea currently provides integrated clinical services through her private practice, after twelve years with outpatient psychiatry at Duke University Hospital. Andrea has developed training and consultation services that support the practical application of gender responsive substance use disorder treatment and trauma-informed care into medical, intellectual/developmental disabilities, mental health and substance use treatment fields, as well as for non-clinical audiences that interface with the public sector such as librarians and educators.
